Periodontal-Systemic Link

The connection between periodontal disease and systemic infection is of increasing interest to the dental profession. Periodontal diseases and oral infections have been linked to systemic diseases such as cardiovascular diseases, adverse pregnancy outcomes, respiratory diseases, diabetes and osteoporosis. This course will review the aforementioned systemic diseases and the recent research evaluating their correlation with periodontal diseases and implant therapy. The second half of the course will emphasize “female considerations in periodontal therapy.” Clinical therapy from both the medical and dental (periodontal) management will be described with an emphasis on osteoporosis.

Course Objectives:

- Evaluate current and past studies relating to periodontitis and systemic diseases
- Clinically apply knowledge of current systemic disease implications to alter periodontal/dental therapy
- Review the physiology of the gonadotrophic hormones and their relationship to clinical periodontal and dental therapy
- Describe the phases of life and the associated needs of the female patient from puberty to menopause
- Review specific periodontal implications associated with hormone changes
